President, Harvey, and Marse Henry Watterson Are Friends Again.

FORGET PAST POLITICS

"Col. Harvey, on Invitation, Spends Hour at White House," Says the Executive's Unusual Statement.

President Wilson and Col. George Harvey are friends again. So also are the President and Marse Henry Watterson. The famous Manhattan Club incident, which blasted friendships, filled the newspapers with columns upon columns of statements and made Col. Watterson talk about fighting a duel, has been forgiven and forgotten. All is serene again between the President and his two edite friends. Only the Hon, Jim Smith, of New Jersey, whose name figured in the passages growing out of the Manhattan Club episode, remains shivering in the Evidence of the reconciliation between the President and Col. Watterson was contained in the following announcement made at the White House tonight:

Visits White House, "Col. Harvey, on the invitation of the President, spent an hour with him at the White House this afternoon discussing the general situation."

It is not usual for the President to issue statements of this character in regard to his visitors, and it was apparent that William Intended that meetal.

As the time drew near for the beginning of the service, hooded monks went shuffling here and there in sandled feet with wax tapers, lighting the hundreds of tail candles banked on the various altars. Palms recited scenes he had witnessed in the and flowers from the monastery sarden.

The procession of Dominican celebrants descended from a side balcony, one bearing the canopy above the head of the chief celebrant, another swinging the incanse lamp from which the scented smoke ascended to the roof. While the procession bowed reverently before the altar the benediction of the blessed sacrament was given before the kneeling congregation.

Touch the Sacred Relic. After the final "Amen" of this service the procession, proceeded by Franciscan friars, who made a path among the kneeling people, threaded its way to the altars of the relic of St. Francis. The congregation crowded about while the ceremony of the veneration of the relic was performed and the monastery choir sang "O Sanctissima Anima," the pasim "Voce Mea" and the motet "Salve Sancte Pater." The congregation knelt in a compact mass in order that they might be among the fortunate ones close to the altar who would be allowed to touch the chalice of the relic. When the relic had been blessed and the favor of touch-ing it conferred upon the visiting Do-minican fathers, the congregation was al-lowed to file before the altar for the Virginia Deputies Swoop Down on Battle Tide Slowly Turning to Allies coveted contact.
